Department of History, Philosophy and Religion

To mark its 150th Anniversary, Oxford Brookes University is pleased to offer a number of full-time PhD Studentships across a range of subject areas in the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences, starting in January 2015. Applications are invited for a PhD Studentship in Image and Representation in Religion in England and Wales, 1700 to 1900. The supervisory team will be led by Professor William Gibson, Professor of Ecclesiastical History. The purpose of this research project is to examine the ways in which religion in England and Wales was represented in art and material culture in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. The conception of 'religion in England and Wales' is taken broadly to enable the successful doctoral candidate to take a full part in shaping the project, Nonetheless the legal establishment of the Church of England will frame the project, even if the focus of the research is on religion beyond the Church and Christianity. Avenues of exploration will include: religious paintings, portraiture and the representation of clergy, architecture and the landscape and settings of religious buildings, prints and satires and contemporary theological preoccupations. The project will also draw upon and promote the University's own art collections. A full project description will be provided in the application pack.

The successful candidate will receive an annual payment of £14,000 for a maximum of three years to cover Home/EU fees (currently £3,966 per annum) and provide a stipend towards living expenses.

As a successful applicant, you will join a supportive and research-active Department. For more information on the Department of History, Philosophy and Religion visit <http://www.history.brookes.ac.uk>
