The Association of Religion Data Archives (www.theARDA.com) is committed to providing free access to the highest quality data on religion. As a part of our mission, we also provide tools for instructors to facilitate the teaching of religion across the social science disciplines. Course syllabi are an extremely popular aspect of the teaching tools we offer (http://thearda.com/learningcenter/sharing/syllabi.asp). We are currently expanding our selection of course syllabi to include courses on the psychology of religion (both undergraduate and graduate). If you currently teach or have taught a course on the psychology of religion, would you be willing to allow the ARDA to post a copy of your syllabi as a resource to other instructors? Your participation in providing free access to these materials will serve to aid the discipline and instructors as they build their own courses.

If you have any questions, comments, or would like to offer your syllabi for consideration, please contact Andrew Whitehead at alw6@clemson.edu.