

Studies in History, Archaeology, Religion and Conservation e-journal Call for special edition contributions

Cardiff University's e-journal Studies in History, Archaeology, Religion and Conservation, is preparing an upcoming special edition on the theme of connections. This edition will explore connections between people, times, places, cultures, religions, spaces, objects, and methodologies. Creative interpretations of 'connections' are welcomed.

We welcome authors to submit original research on this theme in the fields of history, ancient history, religious studies, theology, archaeology and conservation. Papers are subject to a peer-review process to ensure a consistent, high academic standard. We ask that papers not exceed 8000 words – for further instructions, please consult our guidelines.

300 word abstracts are to be submitted by 1st November. If accepted, a full paper is to be submitted for peer-review by 18th December 2015.

Studies in History, Archaeology, Religion and Conservation provides an opportunity for postgraduate researchers, early career researchers as well as established academics to publish their work through a friendly, yet rigorous process. Further information about the journal as well as previous publications may be found on our website.

As a continually publishing journal, we also welcome high quality papers that fall outside the theme of this special edition. Any enquires may be directed to subeditor David Colwill: ColwillDJ1@Cardiff.ac.uk.

With very best wishes,

The Studies in History, Archaeology, Religion and Conservation editorial team
