

Free event: What should young people leave school knowing about religion and belief?

When: 5-6:30pm, Thursday 26th November

Where: Grey Coat Hospital School, St Andrew's Building, SW1P 2DY.

What should young people leave school knowing about religion and belief?

This is the question posed by a new national study of teaching and learning about religion and belief in schools in England, conducted by the Faiths and Civil Society Unit at Goldsmiths, University of London, and funded by the Culham St Gabriel's Trust. Researchers asked 330 people - employers and teachers, students, and parents in 19 schools what they think should be the purpose, content, benefits and structure of teaching and learning in this area - whether inside or outside RE itself.

This free, public event will launch the report of the research study, and is central to a national conversation about the future of learning about religion and belief which is now underway. Findings will be discussed by eminent sociologist of religion, Professor Grace Davie, Chair of NATRE, Daniel Hugill, and Director of Culham St Gabriel's, Mark Chater.

The event will be held from 5-6.30pm on Thursday, the 26th of November at Grey Coat Hospital School, St Andrew's Building, Greycoat Pl, London SW1P 2DY.

Places for this event are limited, so please register with Tim Stacey (t.stacey@gold.ac.uk).