

CALL FOR PAPERS

for the Annual Conference of
The Communal Studies Association

October 6–8, 2016
Salt Lake City, Utah

Anticipating the End Times: Millennialism, Apocalypticism, and Utopianism in Intentional Communities

Intentional communities—religious and secular, historic and contemporary—have often been motivated by visions of the end times, including millennialism, apocalypticism, and some forms of utopianism. These visions range from viewing the end times in terms of worldwide destruction to seeing them as a final precursor to a newly rejuvenated world. While paper proposals may address any aspect of communal and intentional groups, we especially encourage proposals addressing the conference theme, including how visions of the end times have shaped communal groups' lifestyles, theologies, worldviews, and public perceptions.

The 2016 conference will be held at Salt Lake City, Utah, and sessions and tours will highlight Mormon communalism. Driven in part by their millennial theology, the Mormon pioneers who founded Salt Lake City in the late 1840s and 1850s had earlier attempted to implement communal living in their communities in the Midwest, and communalism continued to play an important role in Mormon life, particularly in the 1870s and 1880s. The broader American West has been home to many communal groups driven by millennial, apocalyptic, and utopian views.

We seek a wide range of participation. CSA welcomes proposals from graduate and undergraduate students, first-time presenters, and professional and amateur scholars alike.
