

Jay Johnston and Kocku von Stuckrad are currently editing a volume with De Gruyter, entitled Discourse Research and Religion: Disciplinary Use and Interdisciplinary Dialogues. We decided to have an open peer review for the volume, and all chapters are now available on De Gruyter's Open Peer Review platform. Since discursive approaches have been discussed repeatedly in the study of religion over the years, we hope that a number of colleagues may be interested in reviewing the chapters (or the entire volume). We would highly appreciate that!

The volume authors are Morny Joy, Reiner Keller, Hans G. Kippenberg, Anne Koch, Dominique Mainguineau, Guy Redden, Gil Marvel P. Tabucanon, Erin K. Wilson, Frans Wijzen, as well as Jay Johnston and myself.

Here's the volume's abstract:

The discursive study of religion is attracting increasing numbers of students and researchers from a wide variety of disciplinary backgrounds. This volume offers an up-to-date overview of the field. Written by experts in various disciplines, the volume not only discusses the major topics in the discursive study of religion; it also provides a fresh look at the generation of knowledge about 'religion' in academia and society today.
